WELCOME BACK TO NORTHWEST PARK

According to Trent Kamke, LeMaitre Vascular's business is, "to heal, to save lives." As the vice president of operations at LeMaitre, it was Trent's job to find LeMaitre a new facility where LeMaitre's important business could thrive today, and where it could grow in the future.

Largely owned by surgeons, LeMaitre

Vascular is dedicated to providing vascular surgeons and interventional radiologists with innovative devices and information to improve vascular surgery and reduce patient recovery time.

LeMaitre formerly called Northwest Park its home, but was forced to move to a nearby development in 1999 due to space concerns. By the time its lease was due to expire this year, LeMaitre wanted to return to Northwest Park.

The firm's new headquarters needed to be able to handle the R&D aspect of LeMaitre's business as well as house the executive offices. In addition to the mix of office and R&D space, LeMaitre also needed a specialized "clean room" to handle delicate procedures and house sensitive items.

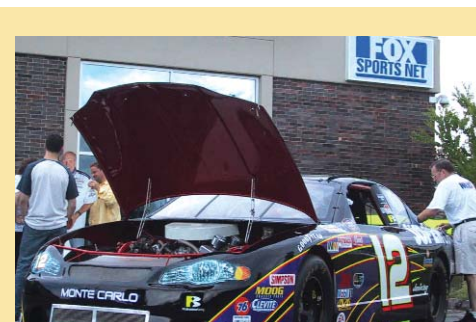

It's a challenge many firms face. They need space that is suitable for some minor industrial uses, but don't want to be stuck in the standard industrial park that is more suitable for 18-wheelers than parking the family minivan after dropping the kids off at the child care center.

"We didn't want to be in an industrial park because that's not the image that we want to project to people. While we need to accommodate some R&D functions, we wanted a professional setting more indicative of an office park than an industrial park," said Trent. "This is our headquarters and we have surgeons, clients and shareholders visiting us. We need to be proud of our building and its landscaping. Northwest Park gives us that image."

LeMaitre Vascular is another impressive firm on Northwest Park's tenant roster and fits in nicely with all the other enterprising, growing companies that make up our business community. Please join us in welcoming LeMaitre (back) to Northwest Park.
